NEW BOOK IN THE COUNTY LIBRARY

The Last Hurrah, by Edwin O'Connor.

Between the Potato Famine in 1847, and 1900, four and a half million Irish crowded into our American cities. They were segregated in tenement districts, persecuted at first on religious grounds, and coldshouldered socially by the Yankee majority. Politics, especially ward politics, was the only ladder by which they could climb out of the slum. They seized it, and in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, to name but three, the city hall became the objective of every bright young talent in the second and third generations. The Last Hurrah is their story, written with true sympathy and warm, impulsive humor in a novel as delightful as it is profoundly moving. From various angles, through various eyes, one gradually discovers a great deal about Irish life and politics in America, about loyalty and hatred, about the evolution of a big city, about what makes a follower and what makes a leader.
